Jo

If i got the location correct it looks like a tree had been planted but has died.

Good idea to replant. Also i suggest creating a dead hedge across the gap to deter people pushing through. The adjacent bramble/ivy etc will soon fill the gap.

There are some birch planted nearby but i wondered about an ornamental hawthorn or rowan. Both native species with spring blossom and autumn berries.

I am unsure on the process to progress things but to pull a proposal together or follow up as required.

This had an old gate on it at one time but, once the gate was removed, the gap has not been filled. Ideally we would like to put some hedging in the gap (and any other gap which may have appeared). John wondered if you might have any suggestions of suitable hedging. I could contact Richard Parmee from Babergh DC to see if he has anything he could offer. Babergh are always encouraging us to plant more trees and wildflowers and have supplies from time to time.
